

Sinclair's plans to air a "news" story days before the election is wrong. Sinclair, as a broadcasting giant, has the ability to public airwaves free of charge and should do so for the good of the public interest. The documentary/news program planned to be run days before the election does not seem to serve the public interest, but the corporation airing the broadcast. If such programs are to be aired they should be aired as programming that is not considered news, and sponsored for airtime like any other show and any election ramifications that may have. To air the program as news clearly defines what is wrong with this country. Since when is a political statement, that a media giant is requiring affiliates to air considered news?

If the FCC does not step in, and reevaluate at the requirements of licensing and operations of large broadcasters such as Sinclair, I will be disappointed as a citizen and television viewer. It is a shame when something such as a Super-Bowl halftime show can and does get more attention from the FCC, then real violations of corporations taking advantage of their power to sway elections and harm the American people out of the truth, liberty, and the American way.
